

Galina Yavorska

„Power“ in Slavic languages: variability of the concept

The concept of „Power“ is central for social relations domain. Slavic languages seem to preserve the initial etymological meaning of possession for „Power“ perceptions. The semantics of possession apparently has a spatial substratum (territory). The paper deals with semantic evolution of the Slavic words for ‘power’ in terms of recurrent semantic shifts from physical things to social and mental phenomena.